Summary of the content of the training discipline:

Lexicology informs students about the most significant characteristics of the vocabulary of the English language, the rules of its formation, functioning and development. The study of lexicology provided general characteristics of the vocabulary of modern English, reveals leading trends in its formation and development, its naming potential. The basic concepts of lexical semantics are disclosed; the main structural and derivational types of words, productive and active patterns of word formation in English are identified. The course gives a brief view of the phraseological subsystem of English and describes different types of semantic relations in the English language vocabulary. The analysis of different types of English dictionaries and the relationship of lexicology and lexicography problems are presented; the main methods of lexicology are briefly characterized.
